Tassel Well Gives 20 Million Ft. Gas

The Tassel well, latest producer in the new Hebron field, was drilled in with a flow of 24,000,000 cubic feet of gas last week. This makes the Tassel well the largest in the field, the Nugent registering 16,000,000 when it was shut in late in June.

The Tassel well was drilled by Schrack considerable distance from the first two wells of the field. Its success greatly enlarges the proven territory near Coudersport.

Hammondsport Natural Gas Company is preparing to drill on a location well within the geological structure. The drillers are rigging up and actual spudding in will commence within a day or two on this new location in the Hebron field. Hammondsport Natural Gas Company has a good block of acreage around this new well.

Woodhull Stars Honor Anniversary

Mrs. Estella Wood enjoyed a pleasant afternoon and evening, Tuesday, July 26, when her daughter, Mrs. Earle J. Pierce, entertained members of Woodhull Chapter, O. E. S. in honor of the 76th birthday anniversary of her mother.

Each guest presented Mrs. Wood with a flower, which altogether made many beautiful bouquets.

Mrs. Wood is a past matron of the local O. E. S. Chapter. She has been shut-in for several months with rheumatism and all the cheery thoughts left with her on this occasion will help to pass many long hours.

Mrs. Pierce was assisted by Mrs. Ella Stroud in serving refreshments to the following guests: Mrs. Mary Brown, Mrs. Nella Whittenhall, Mrs. John Miller, Mrs. Eva Hotaling, Mrs. Winnie Wade, Mrs. Robert Mason, Mrs. Eugene Webster, Mrs. George Moore, Mrs. R. C. Park, Mrs. William Olmsted, Miss Irma Olmsted, Mrs. Frank Park, Mrs. Parke Boyd, Mrs. George Andrus, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Miller, Mrs. Elwyn Ten Broeck, Mrs. Menzo Husted and Mrs. Earle Brown.

Fresh Air Children Return to Homes

Several Fresh Air children are returning to their homes in New York and Brooklyn this week, after a two week's stay at homes here.

Mrs. Robert Mason has supervision of the children in this vicinity.

Following are those entertained and by whom: Eileen Murphy by Mrs. Robert Mason; Carolyn and Blanche Radcliffe by Misses Myrtle and Ethlyn Paul; Catherine Presico and Elizabeth Antonio by Mrs. Lee Heckman; Grace McDetty by Mrs. Wayne Loper; Agnes and Irene Thier by Mrs. Ida Symonds.

Friends Honor Mr. Tubb's Birth Anniversary

Relatives and friends called at the home of C. W. Tubbs Sunday in honor of his birthday anniversary.

Among those from out of town were: Mr. and Mrs. William Fay, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Grinolds, Westfield, Pa; Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Fults and daughter Maxine of Newark; Mr. and Mrs. Otis Reynolds, Corning; Mrs. Maggie Graves, Greeley Lyon, Rathbone; Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Marlatt, Big Flats, and Wm. J. Fink, Buffalo.

The Rev. Horton Struck Tree

An automobile accident occurred recently when the Rev. Robert Horton of Troupsburg collided with a large elm tree in front of the Earle Brown residence as he endeavored to pass Mr. Brown on the right hand side after Mr. Brown had signalled and was about to make a right hand turn into his driveway. He did not know of the approaching car until he heard the klaxon of the Horton car directly opposite him on the right hand side.

Those witnessing the accident estimated the speed of the Horton car as about 40 miles per hour. To avoid striking the Brown car the driver hit the tree doing slight damage to his car, a Ford coach. Mrs. Horton received minor bruises on the knee and forehead and a slight cut on the hand.

The accident happened during the noon hour as the Rev. and Mrs. Horton were enroute to Sayre to visit his mother who was a patient at the Robert Packer hospital.

Steuben County Children's Camp Must Have More Money

The Steuben Couny Children's Camp located in Richtmyer Grove will reach its fourth week on Wednesday, August third. Friends who saw the children on the day of their arrival comment upon the improved condition of every child there. Much individual care has been given the children this year and many physical defects have been corrected. Miss Wilma Standish, dental hygienist, a graduate of the Eastman School in Rochester, N. Y. spent Saturday, July 23 and Saturday, July 30 at the Camp cleaning the children's teeth. This was a volunteer service and greatly appreciated by the management of the camp. The children were delighted with the results and clamored each one to be next. Arrangements have been made for several very necessary throat operations. This work is also a volunteer service by the physicians in Hornell. Mrs. Margaret Standish county nurse, is in almost daily attendance at the camp and is much pleased with the way the children are gaining and the general improvement in their physical conditions.

It is very necesary that funds be provided to carry on this wonderful rescue work. Mr. J. P. Lair, chairman of the camp committee, says that the camp will close if money is not provided to keep the children there. It costs $4. a week per child. Contributions of food stuffs would greatly lessen this expense and if people would contribute from the abundance of their gardens it may mean health and even life itself to some small child.

It is the determination of Mr. Charles Wineburg, president of the association that there shall be no debt contracted during the season of 1932 and all bills have been paid to date. The money is being expended in the most economical way possible and no one outside of the regular workers at the camp is being paid for services rendered. Mrs. Ora Layton, executive secretary, reports that there are still several communities unheard from in conjunction with the Silver Chain of Maintenance contributions and it is not expected that any large gifts will be received, however if each and every township would help with small contributions the children could be kept in camp for two weeks longer, which time is necessary to accomplish the work that has been laid out by the camp committee.

Sunday, July 31st was Addison Day. Rev. K. E. Arnold, pastor of the Baptist church was in charge of the services including the musical program. These Sunday afternoon program at 3:30 P. M. are greatly enjoyed by the children and by visitors at the camp. The public is cordially invited to be present and take part in the exercises.

Say Dairymen Can't Keep Secret

New York, Aug. 1— The fact that the 52,000 League members are just ordinary human beings and like ordinary human beings can't keep a secret, is one safeguard that protects the public from farmers forming an oppressive monopoly, said Fred H. Sexauer, President of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc., addressing the New York City Exchange club on July 28th.

"There has been some talk recently that dairy farmers of the New York Milk Shed were aiming to form a monopoly", said Mr. Sexauer. "It is true that the dairymen of the territory supplying New York City and other cities of this state are striving to perfect one efficient cooperative marketing organization. They could not, even if they wished, form an oppressive monopoly.

"They themselves would be the biggest obstacle to any such procedure. A monopoly usually entails secret agreements and understandings as to prices, territory and merchandising practices. It would be utterly impossible to have as a secret anything that 50,000 or 100,000 people knew about. What that many people knew would be pretty near public knowledge.

"More than one-half of the milk consumed in the City of Greater New York and the adjacent cities of New Jersey comes from and thru other states.

"The Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc., has members in six states and daily sells milk in cities located in several of these states and occasionally makes sales entirely outside its territory. In making such sales, state lines are ignored and only lines of transportation, market needs, efficient utilization of surplus and other economic factors are considered.

"When all is said, the great outstanding evil of an injurious monopoly is the undue enhancement of prices.

"By the provisions of the Federal Law of 1922, known as the Capper-Volstead Law, any cooperative marketing association that by reason of monopoly caused an undue enhancement of prices of the commodity that it handled is subject to the regulation by the Federal Government, by the Secretary of Agriculture primarily, and the Courts finally.

"In addition there are economic barriers and the wise rulings that have been laid down by the New York City Department of Health, which I have always found zealously guards not only the health but also the rights of the consuming public.

"A farming monopoly controlling milk would defeat its own purpose as soon as it attempted to raise milk prices too high. Any such attempt would meet with public opposition that no membership organizations could resist. Even if this opposition were not met and prices were unduly high the farmers within the territory would quickly increase their production to secure more of the high returns. This would break the prices down because there would be such a surplus of milk.

"Complete organization of dairy farmers would be beneficial both to producers and consumers. It will make possible the stabilization of markets and control of surplus back in the country, lowering of operating costs through elimination of duplicate plants, trucking routes and other economies, and give consumers added assurance of constant, adequate supplies of pure, safe milk."

Rebekah Members Guests of Mrs. Cornell

Mr. and Mrs. Brayton Cornell entertained members of the Rebekah lodge at their home, Thursday evening..

A weiner roast and social evening were greatly enjoyed.

Those in attendance were: Miss Loie Williams, Mrs. Elmer Hackett, Mrs. George Woodward, Mrs. Minnie Carpenter, Miss Marie Groves, Mrs. Dolly Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. La Rue Symonds, daughter Laura, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Brotzman, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Towsley and children Willard and Elinor, Mrs. Elcy Mayo, Robert Reynolds, son Richard, Harold Husted, Mr .and Mrs. Paul Symonds, children Dreda and Harold, Carl Carpenter, Agnes Cornell, Perry and Andrew Cornell and the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Cornell.

Past Matrons Guests At Supper Party

Mrs. Eva Hotaling and Mrs. Bernice Miller entertained the Past Matrons' Association at the former's home Tuesday. A supper was served and a social time enjoyed.

The past matrons attending were: Mrs. Loie Husted, Mrs. Una Husted, Mrs. Susie Boyd, Mrs. Isabelle Andrus, Mrs. Carrie Ten Broeck, Mrs. Emma Williams, Mrs. Orsola Brady, Mrs. Amelia Husted, Mrs. Nella Whittenhall, Miss Minnie Husted, Mrs. Emma Park and Mrs. John Miller. Other members and friends Mrs. Mildred Brotzman, Mrs. Louise Symonds, daughter Laura, Mrs. Sara Hotaling, Miss Theressa Colvin, Mrs. Jesse Wilson, Misses Frances and Ethel Wilson, Mrs. Harriet Hober, Mrs. William Olmsted and the hostesses, Mrs. Hotaling and Mrs. Miller, past matrons.

Mrs. Mason Entertained Fresh Air Children

Mrs. Robert Mason entertained at her home on Main Street, Tuesday, for the Fresh-Air children.

Games and other amusements were enjoyed during the day.

The occasion was doubly enjoyable for little IreneThiers whose sixth birthday occurred on this day.

An appetizing picnic dinner was served by Mrs. Mason, assisted by Mrs. Winnie Wade.

Those present were: Agnes and Irene Thiers, Grace McDetty, Elizabeth Antonio, Catherine Presico, Carolyn and Blanche Radcliffe, Eileen Murphy, Mary Esther Loper, Pauline and Kathryn Mason, Mrs. Wayne Loper, Mrs. Lee Heckman, Mrs. Ida Symonds, Miss Myrtle Paul, Mrs. Winnie Wade and the hostess, Mrs. Robert Mason.

Former Rathbone Resident Died at Bluff Point

The funeral of Mrs. Kate Fenton held Monday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Northrup, was largely attended, and the floral offerings were profuse and beautiful. The Rev. Kenneth Arnold was the officiating clergyman, burial was in the Woodhull cemetery. The bearers were Chas. A. Miller, Walter Strait, Harmon Perry, Frank H. Little, Albert Loper and Clarence R. Perry.

Mrs. Kate Fenton died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Barrett, at Bluff Point, last Friday evening. Mrs. Fenton had been in poor health for about a year, but was taken critically ill about five weeks ago, the end being expected for several days.

She was born at Scranton, Penna. May 23, 1856, the daughter of Samuel and Susan Griffith Evans. She married George Merring, Feb. 5 1873. The couple resided in South Bend, Ind., for a short time, but removed to a farm in Rathbone in 1878. Five children were born of this union, Mr. Merring dying in 1912. In 1918 she was married to Albert Fenton who died July 12, 1924. For the past two years Mrs. Fenton made her home with her daughter in Elmira.

Mrs. Fenton was a member of the Methodist church at Rathbone and a member of the Rathbone Grange. She possessed a sterling character, and her quiet, gracious kindliness won the friendship of all with whom she came in contact. From first to last her life was devoted to her family.

She leaves five children; Samuel Merring of Brockport, Mrs. John M. Northrup of Addison, Mrs. C. Arthur Miller of Elmira, Mrs. George Barrett of Bluff Point and Mrs. Wm. Krepline of Amsterdam. She also left 17 grandchildren, 7 great grandchildren and one sister, Mrs. Isaac Chapman of Canandaigua.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. George Barrett and Dr. and Mrs. B. S. Strait of Penn Yan; S. J. Merring, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Langdon, Samuel Merring Jr. of Brockport; Mr. and Mrs. George Merring and son George Jr. of Harrisburg; Mr. and Mrs. George Northrup of Sonyea; Herbert Northrup and Ralph Northrup of Binghamton; Mr. and Mrs. C. Arthur Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Miller Jr., Mrs. Martha Borden, Mrs. Claudia Welsh, Mrs. Mildred Lepper, Mrs. Charles Preston, Mrs. Chester Sykes, Mrs. Rose Moore, Miss Winifred Moore of Elmira; Mr. and Mrs. William Krepline and sons George and Donald, and James Gaggett of Amsterdam; Mr. and Mrs. Merton Merring of Elizabethtown, N. Y.; Miss Ivy Borden and Mrs. Myrtle Soper of Towanda; Mrs. Frank Smith of Franklindale, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. John Fenton of Coopers; Mr. and Mrs. Ten Broeck and Miss Mary Seeley of Woodhull; Jay Wixon of Wayne and Percy Griffiths of Wilkes-Barre.

New Gas Boom Beckons Towards Woodhull Farming Territory

Woodhull people are again warming up to the possibility that their section may yet become the scene of some major developments in drilling for gas. It is evident that some of the big companies are still vitally interested in the Woodhull area, for seismographic tests have been made on a number of farms in this section.

It is reported that the Lycoming Company have made a new location on the Fenner Taft farm southeast of Woodhull, and are preparing to move in a rig during the coming week. Lycoming is said to be prepared for drilling to 6,000 feet in this proposed well. If a new well is started on the Taft farm, it will be one of the most unusual things to happen in this area.

Late in the winter of 1930 a well was started on the Fenner Taft farm by the People's Natural Gas Co., a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey. The following February the well reached a depth of approximately 3,900 feet and was reported to be entering the Oriskany sand when the tools were lost in the bottom of the hole. The well had already been cased and the casing cemented at the bottom, which indicated the owners were confident gas would be struck. The tools were recovered, but during the fishing job a piece of casing near the bottom of the well became broken and lodged in the drillers' way, according to information given out by the operators. Time was consumed in attempting to clear the hole, but eventually the rig was moved away and the well reported as another dry hole.

When a dry wildcat hole is drilled in a field, operators generally consider the territory condemned for considerable distance around. Therefore it is more than passing strange that a second well should be put down on the Fenner taft farm, unless the first test hole told more to the owners than they admitted for publication. As both the People's Natural Gas Co., and the Lycoming Co. are interlinked with the Standard Oil Co., Lycoming operators certainly must have all the information learned at the first Taft well. If a second test is started, that fact alone would be pretty strong assurance the first Taft well revealed facts about the Woodhull-Van Etten anticline which have never been published.

The seismograph, or shock tests have been made on the farms of Sterle Olin, Ray Jordan and Leonard Grist. This process of testing for minerals is quite expensive, and the operators making the tests must have reasonable ground for believing gas will be found near Woodhull in large quantities.

Deputy John Miller Visited Corning Lodge

District Deputy John P. Miller paid an official visit to Corning lodge Odd Fellows at its regular session, Friday evening for the purpose of installing the newly elected and appointed officers for the ensuing year.

He was accompanied and assisted by his following suite; District deputy grand marshall, Morris Williams; District deputy grand warden, Harold Husted; district deputy grand chaplain, Arthur Smith, district deputy grand inside guardian, Ray Morton; district deputy grand herald, Roy Minier.

Mr. Miller with Maurice Williams, Harold Husted, William Olmsted, Ray Morton, Paul Symonds and Roy Minier were in Hornell one evening last week for the purpose of installing officers.

HOME BUREAU

Market at the State Fair

Several weeks ago an announcement was made that there is a possibility of a market at the State Fair where articles made by Home Bureau members all over New York State would be on sale. Because of the response of many homemakers the final arrangements are complete so this year in addition to the usual Home Bureau exhibits put on by various counties at the State Fair, the State Federation of Home Bureaus is sponsoring a marketing booth where "made-at-home" products will be sold. A number of Steuben County women have made inquiries in regard to the market and without doubt the county will be represented by some well-made articles.

Everyone planning to attend the State Fair will surely want to see the booth which occupies the center of the newly renovated commercial building. There will be fresh foods stocked daily as well as canned fruits, vegetables, chicken, jellies and jams. Attractive craft articles made by Home Bureau members from all over the state will be for sale.

The market is an innovation at the State Fair and the State Federation has established it in the hope that it may serve the double purpose of providing an opportunity for Home Bureau women to realize a profit on their surplus products and of supplying the patrons of the Fair with a high quality of home products.

Recreation Service Included in County Program

The value of recreation in the home and community has long been recognized by authorities and is just now beginning to come into its own in the estimation of folks at large. Back in 1926, Miss Jennie Schofield, then associated with the county Home Bureau, started the ball rolling by holding a number of schools in the county which were attended by men and women from many different organizations. At these schools there was actual practice in organizing and carrying on recreational meetings such as might be planned for gatherings of children and grown-ups or a mixture of both.

These schools were conducted for two years and beginning in 1928, Miss Schofield continued the recreation work as a monthly letter service to the leaders that had attended the previous schools. This service has been continued ever since by the county Home Bureau and is again included this year on their program.

The material for the letters this year as for the past two years will be compiled by Mrs. Schuyler Pratt of Wayland.

At present the mailing list for the recreation letter includes 210 representing practically every organization in the county. The new mailing list for the coming year is being made up and any person interested in receiving the monthly service may request it at the Home Bureau office at Bath.

There are 10 recreation letters during the year issued early each month. The letters will contain suggestions for games and stunts, various types of parties and recreation meetings. A new feature planned for this year's group is some special work on family games and games to be played by small groups in the home. There w'll be directions for making simple inexpensive home game equipment. Steuben County folks are invited to take advantage of this service.

A COMMUNIST THREAT

Communism might win more converts among thinking people if the Communists were not continually endeavoring to overthrow firms and individuals in their fervor to replace orthodox government with an equalized state. By these acts they are condemned wherever heads are level and brains unbefogged by crazy "Red" literature.

One of the largest Communistic acts that has stirred man's blood in this country, has been the effort of these radicals to force large banks to close their doors. In Chicago and other places it has been definitely discovered that Communists were inciting runs on banks by broadcasting thru the telephone systems, rumors against the stability of certain institutions. Because those banks were strong enough to sustain the big runs and still have ample currency, these attempts failed, yet no one knows how many bank closings in the past two years may have been really caused by propaganda spread by radicals.

Those who realize the value of a bank to any community, and the calamity of a bank closing to everyone in its circulation area, would wish to grind their heels upon such ruthless attempts by Communists, to sap America's life blood. When a bank closes, everyone loses, whether they are a stockholder, depositor or borrower.

No stone should be left unturned to apprehend the "Reds" who have engaged in these senseless attacks upon banks They should be punished, and if possible, driven to Russia the home of Communism where they can find how wonderful is this Utopia they try to create in other lands.

HUMAN NATURE DOESN'T CHANGE

We hear a good many people remarking that the younger generation has no manners, that the boys and girls of today are rapidly sliding down to perdition and that things were so much better when these complaining individuals themselves were young.

We seem to remember having heard old folks talk in a similar strain when we were young. We are strongly inclined to believe that the bad manners and worse morals of youth have always been a subject of complaint by their parents and grandparents from King Solomon's time, and perhaps farther back than that.

Our belief is strengthened by recently seeing a letter written in 1795 by an English woman who said among other things:

"Our manners become more licentious, our men are indifferent, our women bold and assuming. The pertness of fifteen is allowed to give her opinion on all subjects. She awes into silence her superiors and understanding, for who can wish to hold an argument with a flippant tongue? But a more serious consideration is the hideous undress of the present day, for to be perfectly fashionable is to be half naked."

In the same letter elderly women were criticised for resorting to cosmetics in the effort to make themselves look younger. We have heard people around here talk about how disgusting it is for a woman old enough to be a grandmother to try to look like a flapper. Regardless of whether it is disgusting or not, our point is that it is nothing new. A hundred and thirty-seven years ago people were saying the same things.

One thing is certain. That is, that each generation has to learn its own way about and find its own way of living. In other words, codes of manners and behavior generally are good only for the generation that subscribe to them. And when we consider that half of the people of the United States are under twenty-six years old, it seems to us the young folks have about as much right to decide such things for themselves as the older ones have to prescribe for them.

WE WILL HEAR SOME SILVER TALK

Washington will have plenty of unofficial observers at the British Empire Conference at Ottawa. Many questions which may directly affect the United States are to be discussed among the delegates from the various members of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Among them will be the monetary position of silver, which Canada wants restored to its pre-war status. Canada produces about a quarter of the world's silver. India consumes about half of all silver. India has been trying to maintain the gold standard, and that has forced the price of silver down until Canada can no longer make a profit on it.

The fur may fly when the Canadian and Indian delegates get into an argument on this subject.

On the outcome of the silver discussion at Ottawa will depend the date and program of the international conference on silver and commodity prices which is to be held later in the summer, with the United States taking part.

THE UPSWING HAS BEGUN

Everywhere we hear speaking more hopefully than even a month ago. That mysterious something which some folks call "public psychology" has definitely changed. Instead of talking "depression" we hear business men, workers, bankers and manufacturers talking of "better times ahead".

That is not all that is needed to put us back on a sound working basis, but without such a change of mental attitude we would never have a chance to come back. Faith is as essential in business as it is in religion. When folks believe that things can be done, they usually find a way to do them; when they do not believe that anything they can do will do any good, effort ceases.

What has happened is that faith in America and in our American system is coming back. People are no longer afraid. And as fast as that new faith spreads, just so fast will economic conditions improve.

There is no lack of money in America; the lack has been in confidence in investments. Too many people were stung by speculative schemes in the guise of investments, to encourage them to put money they have since accumulated into anything but the soundest and most proved enterprises. But now money is beginning to come out.

We were interested to see the report of the savings bank deposits in the United States for the past few years. They have been growing steadily since 1926, until now 52 million Americans have more than 28 thousand million dollars in this form of reserve alone, an average of more than $500 each! Most of this money will not be easily lured into speculation, but much of it will go into new homes, into small business enterprises, into a thousand other solid and productive investments as soon as the return of confidence becomes thoroughly manifest.

DIG THE FLORIDA CANAL

It seems to us that this is the time of all times to begin digging that deep-water canal across the neck of Florida peninsula. While we are preparing to build the St. Lawrence deep-water-way along our northern border to cost 258 million dollars, it looks to us as if we should not wait to put a lot of money and men to work in the South, also.

The Florida canal definitely comes in the class of self-liquidating public works for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to lend its $3,800,000,000 of resources. It will cost, Army engineers estimate, about $200,000,000. That is a small sum as money is counted in these days. It will take several years to complete it, but when it is finished it will save so much time and money for ships plying between Gulf ports and the Atlantic seaboard that it will pay for itself in tolls in a few years.

The Panama Canal last year, in spite of depressed foreign trade, earned $12,000,000 above the cost of operation. After paying the interest on the $125,000,000 of Panama Canal Bonds, this left $9,000,000 profit. There is much more ship traffic between the Gulf of Mexico ports and those on the Atlantic coast than there is going through the Panama Canal annually. At a much smaller toll per gross ton, the Florida Canal could earn as much as Panama does.

We understand that application is being made to the Finance Corporation to finance this interprise. We hope this will be one of the things done speedily.

A WAVE OF PROTEST

Business men, manufacturers, property owners of every class and kind are joining in the wave of protest against increasing Governmental expenditures and mounting taxes.

Marshall Field & Company, the largest department store in the world, we believe, have issued a circular to their wholesale customers in which they point that while, last year, Federal, State and local taxes took almost 22 cents out of every dollar of private income, the proportion will be higher this year because of the greatly reduced income.

Expenses have not been reduced; they have been increased. According to the Field tabulation, since 1927 our Federal costs have increased 63 per cent, from $1,964,000,000 to $3,195,100,000 a year.

This is all wrong. It is time to call a halt. We see only one way to do that, and that is to make economy the watchword of the coming campaign. No man should be supported for election to any office in which he will have anything to say about taxation or the spending of tax money who will not pledge himself to reduce expenses and taxes, even if by doing so he loses a few votes when he comes up for re-election.

We think that nine-tenths of Governmental extravagance is due to the desire of legislators to placate groups and individuals whose votes they desire. It is nothing short of robbery, in our opinion, for a man in public office to impose taxes upon one class of the public in order to spend the money for the benefit of another class whose votes, he hopes, will perpetuate him in power.

It is time to stop.

For two years the industrial captains and political prophets have been saying that if automobile production would pick up, other things would start. Now here you are! Official reports show that May was the best month among the automobile manufacturers for a year.

The roaring metropolis doesn't care particularly when Mr. Jones arrives to buy a new line of goods, but a famous hotel within the garment center does and uses every means to show that it does. If Mr. Jones had been a guest there before, the clerk mentions the number of the room he occupied and asks him if he would care for that, or another like it. Bell-boys call him "Mr. Jones," and not "Sir". Next morning his home town paper is outside his door. In awaking him, the telephone operator informs that it is rainy and he should dress accordingly.

SAY YOU SAW IT ADVERTISED IN THIS PAPER

The Way of Life
By BRUCE BARTON

SOMETHING SIMPLE

I wish to ask that no more Plans for solving the economic situation be sent to me. My quota is completed; my files are full. My mental decision to retire from Plan Reading was reached some time ago.

An earnest gentleman with a gleam in his eye got in anyhow the other day: He asked me to read a book in which a new prophet sets forth a new religion. The gentleman assured me that if only all men and women could be led to think the thoughts of this prophet every difficulty would fold up.

While we talked I turned the pages of the book, and after about a minute I assured him that I should not need to read it in order to know that it would have no influence.

He was aggrieved. "You have a closed mind," he charged.

"Not at all," I said. "I happen to know what kind of words move the world. I'll give you an example:

" 'The Lord is my shepherd,' etc.

" 'Four score and seven years ago our fathers founded on this continent,' etc.

"Contrast these simple words with a couple of phrases from your book," I said:

" 'The definitely "anticipatory" value of the self-protecting mechanism of covenant obligations . . .'

" 'Expanding consciousness obtainable through the direct application of the method of cyclic evolution . . .'

"Nobody is going to overturn the world," I concluded, "unless he is able to make his ideas understandable even to a little child. Second-raters are always obscure. But the head man in any department of life, I care not whether it be medicine, theology, science or what, he can make a talk that will fascinate a kindergarten".

John Bunyan explained to his readers that he might have adopted a "stile" much more fancy but he wanted his book to be read by common people everywhere. He has his wish: "Pilgrim's Progress" will live as long as anything in our language.

Lincoln's style grew steadily clearer and simpler as he grew in years and wisdom.

"What harm can a book do that costs a hundred crowns?" Voltaire exclaimed. "Twenty volumes folio will never make a revolution; it is the little pocket pamphlets that are to be feared."

I do not know what Plan will lead us to new heights of prosperity or whether, indeed, there will be any one Plan. But if there be, it will consist of things that everybody can understand, such as "the less you hamper trade the more trade can expand".

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. Charles E. Dunn, D.D.

Lesson for August 7:

The Ten Commandments. I. Exodus 20:1-11

The Ten Commandments, hammered by Moses into tables of stone at Mt. Sinai, according to the familiar narrative of Exodus, comprise the basic moral law of the Hebrew people, and of Christian civilization.

Our lesson deals with the first four of these pithy laws, which outline man's fundamental obligation to God. The remaining six laws in the Decalogue treat of man's duty to his fellows.

Note the first Commandment "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," does not deny the existence of many deities. It was a long time before the Hebrews arrived at that sublime conviction of the unknown prophet of the exile that there is one God only, "the God of the whole earth." What the Commandment means is that the God of Israel must be given the preference over rival gods. Today it might be paraphrased to read, "Thou shalt have at least one God." For our danger is not that we are tempted to worship many gods, but to repudiate God and worship altogether.

The Second Commandment, a sweeping prohibition of the carving of idols, was necessary in Moses' day, when the making of images was carried to excess. For our own time, however, it is far too drastic. We are lovers of art, and appreciate its immense contribution to the religious impulse. For us the Commandment means a protest not against sympathies of God, but against gods purely man-made, constructed after our own pattern. Our God is pure Spirit, mightier and grander than any picture, mental or material, we may draw of Him.

The Third Commandment protects the sanctity of oaths. In this day of slipshod talk, falsehood and perjury, we need to take it much to heart. As Jesus insisted, our Yea should be precisely Yea, and our Nay exactly Nay. It is also a protest against profanity, an inevitable sign of feeble vocabulary and impoverished thinking.

The Fourth Commandment was never more needed. The trend of our day is to make Sunday a holiday rather than a holy day. Now Sunday presents a splendid opportunity for rest, worship, the home life, and the personal life. Are we not in danger of losing these values through our lust for pleasure and speed on the Lord's Day?

ECLIPSE—long one due

The next total eclipse of the sun will be visible in most parts of New England on August 31 this year. The moon's shadow will pass across the face of the sun in the afternoon, about 3:28 o'clock standard time, and the total eclipse will last for about three minutes. Most total eclipses last only about a few seconds, so astronomers are looking forward to this one and hoping for clear weather, in the expectation that their photographic instruments will reveal more than is yet known about the elements which exist in the sun.

Outside of the black disk of the moon's shadow which obscures the sun's face in a total eclipse, huge flames shoot out, sometimes as far as 100,000 miles, from the body of the sun. These are burning gases, the color of which, as seen through the spectroscope, tell what they are composed of. It is known that a large part of this flaming mass which we call the sun is iron, heated to a point where it vaporizes. Almost every other mineral found on earth has also been detected in these sun gases, but science is still trying to learn.

Whether the sun is getting hotter or cooler is a matter of great importance to all mankind. A drop of a few degrees in the average heat received by the earth from the sun would mean a return of the Ice Age, when glaciers a mile thick formed as far south as Kentucky; an increase of a degree or so in sun heat would start palm trees and sugar cane growing in Labrador.

SOIL—and soilless crops

They've been experimenting with "soilless" farming at the University of California, and have proved, pretty conclusively it seems, that most crops can be grown without any soil at all. All that is needed is water and fertilizer.

All that make one soil different from another is the kind and quantity of plant food—nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash—that each contains. Immense crops of celery, potatoes, berries, tomatoes and other vegetables are grown in some parts of Florida where the sandy soil contains naturally almost no plant food. Fertilizers—do the work.

It is hardly likely that the staple crops, wheat, cotton, corn and the like, will ever be grown commercially except on soils adapted to them but it is entirely possible that most of the vegetable and small fruit crops of the future will be grown in wire baskets suspended in water, in which the essential plant foods in their proper proportions have been dissolved.

WOOD—worth fortunes

Ever hear of Andiroba? Or Castanheira? Those are the names of some of the new kinds of lumber that have been cut on Henry Ford's Brazilian rubber plantation, and which have been brought to the United States for use in cabinet-making. Other rare and new varieties of tropical woods which may be expected to come into use for making fine furniture because of their beauty of color and grain, and their hardness, are Muiracoatiara, Abiu Branco, Massaranduba, Amargaso, Angelim Pedra, Sucupira Amarella, Pau d'Arco, Uxy, Tatajuba and Itauba.

The pursuit of rare and new varieties of wood fit for the use of the cabinetmaker is one of the most interesting fields of adventure, in which hundreds of men are engaged. A single log which can be cut for veneer may be worth thousands of dollars; a shipload of certain South American woods would be worth a comfortable fortune.

There are still millions of square miles of forests which have never been explored, and the men who can discover in them new sources of fine woods can name their own price, almost for their finds.

At a Farm and Home Week exhibit, New York farm women showed garments they had designed and made at home at an average cost of about five dollars.

Two parts of finely-ground bread crumbs to one part corn meal make an acceptable corn bread. Crumbs may also be used satisfactorily in muffin recipes to save flour.

REAPING

For a successful harvest . . . more important this year than ever . . . several factors had to be considered. Good soil, well fertilized and regularly cultivated, and the uncontrollable weather are all important elements. No tiller of the soil has ever failed to recognize these essential factors of a successful harvest. The only factor over which they have no control is that of weather.

For Prosperity . . . more important this year than ever . . . several factors must be considered. Judicious buying, the establishment of thrift in the home and business and Trading at Home. No wise individual has ever failed to recognize THESE factors of the return of prosperity.

The last few years have been troublesome ones on the sea of prosperity, many looked-for riches didn't come, debts kept piling up, men were out of work and everything took on a sombre hue. Storms will happen but an effort on the part of all will make the storm less damaging.

Judicious buying will play a large part in the weathering of a future storm, thrift needs no commendation but Trading at Home needs to be preached more than ever in these reconstruction days. When the public heeds the wisdom of the home-spent dollar they will meet that dollar often in its rounds to make this a better town. We resist the effort to take money away from this town because the future of our community welfare is at stake.

To reap a good harvest in this town depends on the people's application of the lessons learned in troublesome times.

This Week in WASHINGTON
BY RADFORD MOBLEY
AUTOCASTER WASHINGTON BUREAU

Washington, D. C., Aug. 1—Congress has adjourned, but Senator Borah is still in session.

As chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committe of the Senate, Senator Borah has announced that he will conduct an investigation into the treaty recently negotiated between the United States and Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence deep water-way. Since this treaty does not take affect until it has been ratified by the proper legislative bodies of both nations, the fate of this St. Lawrence project rests with the United States Senate, and from present indications it is going to be one of the hotly controversial subjects of debate when the Senate convenes again next December.

For twenty-five years the cities and states bordering on the upper lakes have been presumably united behind the movement to make them seaports. The agitation for a twenty-seven foot water-way from Duluth to Montreal has been going on for at least that length of time. A week ago, when the announcement was made that a treaty had finally been negotiated between Washington and Ottawa providing for the carrying out of this immense project, it was hailed by the deep water-way advocates as a great victory.

In a week all of that has changed. There is no public project against which so many shafts of criticism have been leveled as are being aimed at this treaty at the present time. Some of the criticism is political, some is economic.

Chicago Now "Doubts"

Chicago has long been ambitious to become a seaport, as a part of that city's ambition to rival New York in every way. If there was a navigable channel twenty-seven feet deep, all the way from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Chicago, that ambition might in part be realized. But Chicago and the state of Illinois now seem to be lining up against the treaty on the ground that it limits the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Chicago Drainage Canal to 1,500 cubic feet per second. Chicago says that that is not enough to maintain a nine-foot depth of water for the inland water-way from the lakes to the Gulf. So strong opposition to the treaty is already developing in Illinois and in the states to the south and west thereof that are interested in the lakes to the Gulf water-way.

Opposition is developing from the State of New York from two or three different angles. There is nothing in the treaty which allocates to the State of New York any part of the $258,000,000 which the St. Lawrence water-way is expected to cost the United States, and President Hoover refused to discuss that point with Governor Roosevelt and the chairman of the New York State power authority, Frank P. Walsh. The fear that New York State will have to spend $150,000,000 of the $258,000,000 is one of the grounds of opposition from that state. Another point on which the fight on the treaty will be made is the question of how the hydro-electric power which will be developed along the northern border of New York State will be handled on this side. Whether the disposition of the electric power is to rest with the State of New York or with the Federal Government is a question which is not answered in the treaty.

Some Broader Oppositions

Another ground of criticism is that under the treaty the Canadian Government will have to spend only about one-sixth as much money as the United State, and, that about $55,000,000 of American funds will have to be spent for Canadian materials, engineers and labor, while there will be no compensating expenditures by Canada for American labor and materials.

Those are only samples of the things that are being said about the treaty as negotiated. Back of all these criticisms there is a much broader base for the real fight against ratification.

This base is the growing belief that a 27-foot water-way 1,500 miles long, would not accomplish the purpose which it is intended to serve, namely, that of making seaports out of Duluth, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Toronto and the other towns on the upper lakes. At the time when twenty-seven feet was fixed upon as the necessary depth to bring ocean-going ships up into the lake country and the effort to develop this water-way was begun, ocean commerce was still carried in small ships. Since then we have had the world war, in which practically all the old ships were scrapped or rendered obsolete, and the new merchant marine of the world consists mainly of large ships, which could not by any possibility penetrate into the upper lakes through a twenty-seven foot channel, even if it were economical for them to travel at the slow speed to which rivers and canals limit navigation. In other words the shipping industry has developed while the St. Lawrence deep water-way project has stood still.

It is estimated by those who know about such things that not more than fourteen per cent of the passenger cargo ships engaged in the United States foreign trade, and not more than fifteen per cent of the fast all-cargo vessels or tankers now using American ports, could use the new water-way if it were built.

And In Conclusion

In the enthusiasm generated in the Middle West by the advocates of the seaway, very little emphasis has been placed upon the fact that navigation in the upper lakes, from Buffalo to Duluth, ends early in December, when the insurance companies refuse to carry any more insurance on vessels facing the oncoming ice. Navigation never opens again before March or April, so that, so far as through traffic is concerned, the proposed deep water-way would be out of commission for from three to four months every year.

And, as a final argument against the proposal, it is pointed out that every important canal, including the Suez Canal, the Manchester Canal, the Panama Canal and the Chicago Drainage Canal, cost from two to three times as much as the original estimates contemplated. The estimate for the United States share of the St. Lawrence deep water-ways is $258,000,000. It is more likely, its opponents say, to cost half or three quarters of a billion before we are through with it. Interest charges on this investment at three per cent might easily run to fifteen million or even twenty-five million dollars a year.

Anyway, whatever the merits of the treaty, it is certain that one of the bitterest controversies, perhaps the bitterest since the Treaty of Versailles was rejected by the Senate in 1919, is on the cards for the next session.

Prizes to Be Awarded At Fremont Potato Field Day

Ribbons and cash prizes will be awarded the winners in the plowing and 'stepping in' contest at the Potato Field Day in Fremont, August 12. These contests will be one of the many attractions of the meeting to be held on the Seymour Bridge farm next Friday. The plowing contest begins at nine o'clock and continues until twelve. Each entrant will furnish his own team and walking plow. Prizes of $5, $3 and $2 and ten ribbons will be given the winners. I. D. Karr of Almond, A. E. Scudder of Painted Post and Charles Noble of Prattsburg will judge the event.

The 'stepping in' contest occurs from 1:45 to 2:00 and has been organized by Lester York of Greenwood. He announces that seed will be furnished and that each contestant is to bring his own sack. The field is to be marked both ways and the judging will be on the basis of the accuracy of the work and the amount of seed dropped.

Arrangements are being made to entertain several thousand potato growers from all parts of the state and delegations are coming from many distant counties. This event, which is being organized by the Steuben County Farm Bureau and the Empire State Potato Club, promises to be the biggest meeting of its kind ever held in Steuben County.

There will be an exhibit of all kinds of farm machinery, especially equipment used in growing and marketing potatoes. During the day much of this machinery will be in operation in the field. Talks by prominent potato growers will cover every phase of potato production and marketing. The Methodist and Adventist churches of Fremont and the Masonic Lodge of South Dansville will furnish lunches and dinners on the grounds at moderate prices. Every arrangement is being made for the entertainment and convenience of the guests.

The California extension service says it costs in California $13.88 a year to keep a doe rabbit, and, that on the average a doe returns $10.66; a net loss of $2.72.

Five new herd improvement associations were organized in New York state from March to June. Seventy-six associations are now testing 36,797 cows for 1,531 dairy men.

Seed Laboratory Sets New Record

Tested Over 8,000 Samples for Nearly 600 Persons and Firms This Past Season.

A new record was established by the seed laboratory at the State Experiment Station during the planting season which has just come to a close when tests were completed on 8,209 samples of seeds send in by 590 individuals, firms, or institutions, according to a report just made public by Prof. M. T. Munn, State seed analyst in charge of the laboratory. These tests were in addition to the regular routine examination of vegetable seeds, farm crop seeds, grass seeds, etc, sent in to the laboratory by inspectors of the Department of Agriculture and Markets, he says. The samples came from farmers, State institutions, seed dealers, canning companies and others.

"When the present seed law was enacted, provision was made whereby any citizen of the State might have the privilege of submitting samples of seed to the seed laboratory for examination and test, subject to such rules and regulations as might be adopted", says Prof Munn. Each year the number of persons taking advantage of this provision and the number of samples submitted has increased, with the past season setting a new record. Practically every form of information and every determination that can be made is now being asked for, with a notable increase in the number of requests for the inspection of seed for possible disease infection."

According to the rules governing the seed laboratory, free tests are made for farmers of the state who send in samples of seed of their own growing and who intend to use the seed for planting purposes, where the seed is to be offered for sale or where the samples come from a seed dealer, or others, a nominal fee is charged for the test.

As a further example of the type of service rendered by the seed laboratory, Prof Munn is warning New York fruit growers, especially in the western part of the State, against attempts to sell a very low grade of red clover for clover crop purposes. Analysis shows that the seed contains mostly weeds and screenings with a little red clover of only average germination. The same money put into good seed would assure much greater returns and would eliminate the weed hazard, says Prof. Munn.

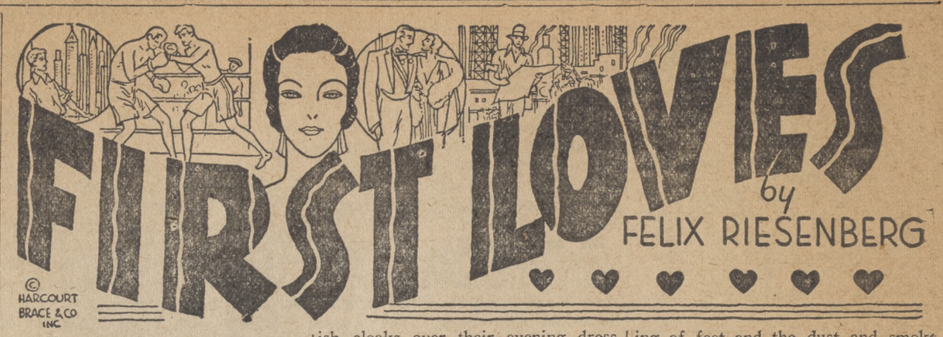
IN THIS PAPER SAY YOU SAW IT ADVERTISED



Fifth Installment

SYNOPSIS: Johnny Breen, 16 years old, who has spent all his life aboard a Hudson river tugboat plying near New York, is tossed into the river by a terrific explosion which sinks the tug, drowns his mother and the man he called father. Ignorant, unschooled, and fear driven, he drags himself ashore, hides in the friendly darkness of a covered truck—only to be kicked out at dawn—and into the midst of a tough gang of boys, who beat and chase him. He escapes into a basement doorway where he hides. The next day he is rescued and taken into the home of a Jewish family living in the rear of their second-hand clothing store. He works in the sweatshop store—and is openly courted by Becka—the young daughter. . . . The scene shifts to the home of the wealthy Van Horns—on 5th Avenue, where lives the bachelor—Gilbert Van Horn—in whose life there is a hidden chapter. That chapter was an affair with his mother's maid, who left the house when he was accused.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Harriet had left with a man, her father or brother. Simmons did not know. They walked down toward Park Avenue, and beyond, to the river, and the Cavalier. Tom Breen was glad to get her at any price.

As Gilbert left home his father gripped him by the hand. "Well, Gilbert, you are a Van Horn, not a Hallett, thank God. The girl may show up again. I suppose she knows how to take care of herself." The words, then as now, held a familiar ring. "But, let this be a lesson to you."

At the club, Brevoort, in the utmost confidence, pouring out a liberal highball of Sherwood, tossed it off and told the whole story to Marvin Kelly, a gentleman who mingled politics with law. "I recall the girl, Marvin, a handsome wench, a figure, if you follow me, and a way with her. Think of leaving my boy closeted with that."

"He's a Van Horn, all right. Well, here's luck to 'em both."

"How!" and the men tossed off their drink.

The affair never got outside of the Van Horn home. Servants in those days, were loyal; it was still in a time when servants talked, but not for publication.

* * *

Gilbert Van Horn, in the fall of 1900, sat in the window of his Fifth Avenue club.

Marvin Kelly, Judge of the State Supreme Court, man about town, gray, genial, came in as the long afternoon shaded into night.

"Gilbert, old boy," Marvin Kelly drew off his gloves and tossed his cane and hat on a vacant chair. "I'm having a bit of fun tonight, on the Bowery, down at McManus' place. What are you doing?"

"Having a whiskey sour; what else?"

"Al right. Dine with me at Martin's, and then for the mixed-ale scrappers. Malone has a string of terriers, he's trying out a couple of heavies."

"All right, Judge—— Ah, Josephine. I want to tell you about her."

"Yes."

"Well, you know, I'm rather lucky about that. Getting to feel like a family man, home, you know, laughter, and a bit of responsibility. She's entered at the Misses Filters. Sort of has the crowd guessing. Gad, I met her the other day, out walking with a class. Really, I felt as if I was responsible for the whole lot of them. A female gave me a cold stare when I bowed to my ward."

"Gilbert, all you need is a hint, and you'll be a family man yet."

"I'm thinking seriously of getting an automobile." They talked idly. "Looked at a Panhard the other day, just brought over. The foreign makers are years ahead of us in that."

"It's a dangerous thing." Judge Kelly had ordered his drink and was considering it. "Joseph Muldoon, a child of seven, was killed on 51st Street last April by one of the new vehicles. There'll be dozens killed every year before we know it. Don't take any chances, Gilbert."

"Depend on me being careful, Judge—here's looking at you!"

For a while they continued to look out on Fifth Avenue.

"Come, Gilbert, let's walk up to Martin's."

"I feel like a good scrap tonight." Van Horn stood and flexed his arms. "Wouldn't mind mixing in it myself. Judge, you're a life saver."

The two friends strolled up the avenue in the dusk.

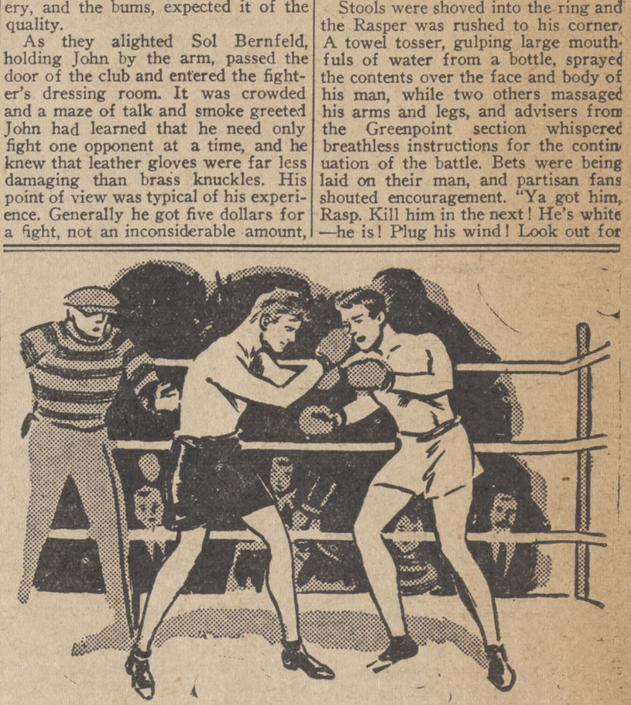
For a block or so each way, groups of loiterers, and the curious, talked of the fights. The crowd gradually thickened before the doors of the club. Now and then some notable would appear; the McManus came; then followed the district chief of an adjoining principality in the close feudal system of Tammany; or some sporting celebrity would dash up in a cab. It was more the attraction of the club than any special fame of the contenders that drew these men. Pug Malone, the trainer, generally put up a show. Boys and men looked on, with the perpetual interest of expectation.

Gilbert Van Horn and Judge Kelly, wearing silk opera hats, and with rakish cloaks over their evening dress, stepped from a red wheeled hansom. They had dressed the part, a bit of convention in the old city, for the Bowery, and the bums, expected it of the quality.

As they alighted Sol Bernfeld, holding John by the arm, passed the door of the club and entered the fighter's dressing room. It was crowded and a maze of talk and smoke greeted John had learned that he need only fight one opponent at a time, and he knew that leather gloves were far less damaging than brass knuckles. His point of view was typical of his experience. Generally he got five dollars for a fight, not an inconsiderable amount, and here he might earn fifteen.



They were off, shuffling above the resin canvas.

"But you got to win. Remember it, John, you got to win to cop the big money." John and Sol were being pushed along a narrow aisle to the ringside as Gilbert and the Judge took their seats, chatting with the McManus. Blue smoke lifted in the air, drifting in flat veils like unsteady saucers of mist. A hum of talk rose between the scraps. It was a male audience; it was a time of hard heroic fighting. A hush fell over the hall as the announcer appeared. John had climbed into the ring, and a million fierce little eyes, terribly close together, in pairs, seemed to be boring at him from all sides of an endless void.

Immediately about him, under streaming light, was stark reality.

"The next bout, gentlemen, an' I hope it will be a bout,"—there was a slight pause filled with boos and jeers—"is between"—and the stout man under the floodlight in the center of the ring brought a piece of paper closer to his eyes—"is between Rasper Jorgan," he waved his hand toward a corner of the squared circle—a dark-skinned muscular youth rose to the introduction, grinning at the crowd, "known as the 'Polack Wonder,' and"—his other hand pointed accusingly at John Breen—"and Fighting Lipvitch!"

The fighters had their bandages examined. The gloves were adjusted. The stools were pulled from the corners. All but the referee left the ring. The fighters shook hands. The gong sounded. They were off, shuffling above the resined canvas. The cold white light pelted down on them. Their bodies glistened, like animated specimens on some monster operating table. The calls of the crowd rose more violent than ever. The Polack Wonder was picked to win. Cries of "Kill the white-washed kyke! Knock his block off! Bust him up! Mix 'er! Kill him!" interspersed with oaths, greeted the senses of John, reeling backward from a hard blow on the nose. The warm salty blood trickling over his lips, sucking into his mouth, filled him with an ungovernable rage. Dancing before his narrowed eyes he saw the thing he was after, a cruel fighter who, in those red moments, epitomized the enmity of man.

During the first minute of the round, as the fighters, by their actions, revealed a lack of science, many of the audience turned their backs to the ring, preferring to discuss matters of greater interest while awaiting the main event of the evening, a much touted bout between third-rate heavies. But, as the Rasper drew blood, and the fighting kyke showed spunk, the fans, alert on the instant, turned back to the ring. The tiered seats and the gallery bent over, glued to their chairs and benches. The mephitic air, heavy with stale tobacco and foul with the fumes of whiskey breath, vibrated under the impact of tight fighting gloves pummeling human flesh.

The Rasper landed again and again, then John, seeing an opening, drove his hard right to the chin and laid bare the lower teeth of the Polack. Dark blood oozed from the cut lip in a sluggish stream. A quick left to the jaw, partly blocked by the Rasper, spattered blood over both fighters; the gong sounded the end of the round. Cheers rose from the ringside, cat calls and boos mingled with the din. The stamping of feet and the dust and smoke that lifted above the crowd attested their approval. They were getting blood and action for their money.

Stools were shoved into the ring and the Rasper was rushed to his corner. A towel tosser, gulping large mouthfuls of water from a bottle, sprayed the contents over the face and body of his man, while two others massaged his arms and legs, and advisers from the Greenpoint section whispered breathless instructions for the continuation of the battle. Bets were being laid on their man, and partisan fans shouted encouragement. "Ya got him, Rasp. Kill him in the next! He's white—he is! Plug his wind! Look out for his right! He's a nut—crack him!"

Fighting Lipvitch also had his adherents. Men yelled and howled as he went to his corner where Manager Sol and a boy, worked over him in clumsy fashion. Sol Bernfeld had failed to provide his man with proper handlers. John wiped his nose with a towel and gulped from a bottle of water. Then he sat back on his stool, his arms resting on the lower ropes of the ring. He was without the artificial aid for quick recuperation accorded his opponent. An angry murmur arose from the excited crowd, brought to a close by the ringing of the gong for the second round.

The experienced Rasper ducked and dodged in a waiting game to wind and tire his opponent. Hoots and howls of rage greeted these unpopular maneuvers. "The Polack's stallin'!" some one shouted and an empty flask whirled at him, missed, and crashed into the spectators in the opposite ringside seats. A great cheer for John swept through the crowd as his right fist again smashed against the jaw of the dodging Rasper with the hard sharp thud of a perfect blow, rocking his man, for an instant, against the ropes. John responded to the change of sentiment with a burst of speed, landing right and left against the body in quick succession and jumping clear of a furious counter blow. Purple blotches rose under the impact of his fists. Then, after a running minute, a short hook to the wind ended the round. The Rasper staggered to his corner, a look of doubt crossing his battered face. John fell onto his stool, his nose again bleeding, a thick trickle of gore smearing down his throat and over his heaving chest. At a whistle from the trainer two boys from the Samson Club elbowed Sol and his assistant out of the corner, stripped off their coats and began rubbing and blowing water under direction of Pug Malone. A third man swung a towel alternately from his shoulders, fanning air into John's face. They rubbed and kneaded his legs, for fighters tire there first. "Play his wind," was the advice of Malone, "don't stop—mind your guard," and the third round was called with the sudden clanging of the gong.

"Some is natural fighters, same as some is swimmers," Pug Malone was expounding his views in the dressing room of the Samson Sporting Club, after the fight. "They just naturally know how to fight, to put steam into a punch, an' kick, when it lands. Why dammit, ninety-nine fighters out of a hundred hit like windmills. Now, that kid—Breen's his name, not Lipshitz, he's no kyke—that kid's a born natural fighter."

The Jorgan-Lipvitch fight, ending by a clean knockout in the middle of the sixth round, after a mill filled with fight from start to the count of ten, completely overshadowed the main event, in which the mixed-ale pugilists, "Red Herring" Hennessy and Jeff Keegan, floundered around in clumsy buffeting while the crowd dwindled in disgust.

Move of Tammany to Put in Thacher Not Shadow Boxing

Albany, Aug. 2—There are signs that it is not merely shadow boxing which has put Mayor Thacher of this city in the field as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor. The O'Connells, who control Albany County absolutely, and run it on the most approved Tammany plan, have taken two steps which indicate they are not in fun. They have announced that Mr. Thacher is a candidate for Governor only and will not accept any other place on the ticket, thus disposing of the Roosevelt-Lehman plan to pour oil on the waters by giving the Mayor the Lieutenant Governorship nomination. Their second step was to notify James A. Farley, State and National Chairman, that he and his committee will be expected to keep hands off the Governorship nomination.

Has Backing of Tammany

In the best informed circles in Albany it is believed the O'Connells are backed in this move by Tammany Hall and its New York City allies, except possibly those in the Bronx, where Mr. Flynn, Governor Roosevelt's Secretary of State, is a power. They claim they have assurance of support for Thacher from a large majority of the up-State county leaders. With backing from both these sources it is going to be some little job to put Mr. Lehman at the head of the ticket, even with the assistance of his great wealth, Mr. Farley's maneuvering and the Governor's influence. In the view of some experienced observers about the only thing that would straighten out the situation would be for Governor Roosevelt not to deal too harshly with Tammany's pet, Mayor Walker. A little kindness in that direction might remove many obstacles from the path of Mr. Lehman.

The Roosevelts Are Lining Up

It has been an open secret that one factor which aided in the nomination of New York's Governor to head the Democratic ticket this year was his name. It was felt that it would be a great asset in the campaign and that many people would vote for him in November just because he was a "Roosevelt". The Governor himself has not been slow to take advantage of this factor and in his addresses has frequently referred to Teddy the Great as "my distinguished relative", "my cousin". and so on. In fact, he made three such references in one speech. His supporters portrayed him as (1) the brother of Theodore the First, (2) a son of the same, (3) the first cousin. This led to some inquiry which revealed that Franklin Roosevelt is really a fifth cousin of Theodore Roosevelt.

* * *

Think Teddy is Running

The extent to which some people fail to keep in touch with public affairs is indicated by letters which in large numbers are reaching Theodore Roosevelt's widow, who resides at Oyster Bay. In these, most of which are addressed to Mr. Roosevelt, though some are for Mrs. Roosevelt, writers send congratulations on the nomination. Mrs. Roosevelt has sent replies in which she tells the degree of relationship and informs her correspondents that she expects to vote for Mr. Hoover for President.

Other Roosevelts for Hoover

As a matter of fact, so far as the Roosevelts have been heard from most of them are going to support Mr. Hoover, and some of them will take an active part in this campaign. In addition to Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, who has given for publication a statement of her position, other members of the family of the twenty sixth President will be active. Col. Theodore Roosevelt, the Second, Governor General of the Philippines, will be home on a vacation soon and will make addresses over the country helping to set the matter straight. Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth will also do her part to disabuse the public mind of a wrong impression, and others of the clan will be heard from. Apparently the exact status of the relationship of the Roosevelt family is one subject about which the public will get the truth before voting day.

Extra Session Not Likely

From many sources has come pressure upon the Governor and legislative leaders to call a special session of the Legislature in the near future to make advance arrangements for relief to various cities and other communities for the coming winter, which they do not expect to be able to provide without help. But it is not expected any such meeting will be called, at least until after the election. Not until then will be known whether the voters approve the proposed $30,000,000 bond issue for relief purposes. If it is approved a special session will almost certainly be held to determine the manner in which the proceeds shall be used. In the meantime, in case of emergency, there will be available a share of the $300,000,000 appropriated by the federal government for relief in the various states and cities.

Democrats Get Mixed

The Democrats of Albany and of Rensselaer, just across the river, seem to have things badly mixed up this year. On a big banner hung across State Street in this city they placed the Republican emblem of an eagle instead of the usual star under which all good Democrats are urged to vote. And in Rensselaer they spelled the Democratic candidate's first name "Franklyn". But perhaps that's only another attempt to do away with traditions.

For Vice-President

James H. Maurer, Socialist candidate for Vice-President, with Norman Thomas, is waging a vigorous campaign which was launched at Washington last week. He addressed a mass meeting at the Auditorium and later the Bonus Army in camp.

There's Money in a Garden — By A. J. Pratt

Utilize Space Where Early Crops Were Removed

If the August garden has empty space,
This indicates that there is waste
If, however, all is green,
It shows you must have used your bean.

Common spinach, early radishes and early lettuce have probably already gone past their usefulness in your garden. Perhaps early carrots, early beets and early snap beans, too, are about at, if not past, their best edible stage. The question of what to plant in their place may mean much to home gardeners. In these blank spaces one may yet grow a good supply of carrots, beets, turnips, lettuce or spinach for fall and winter use.

Many people fail to give the late vegetables the same chance their early ones had by raking more fertilizer into the soil. If the soil is too dry at the time of planting this second crop, it will pay to get out the hose or springling can and give the ground a good soaking.

A list of crops that may be planted in July or early August and expected to mature before frost can be obtained free from the department of vegetable crops of the New York state college of agriculture, Ithaca, N. Y.

How, What and Why?

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York state colleges of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges.

Controlling Quack Grass

L. S., Ararat, Pa., asks how to control quack grass.

The best time to start the control of quack grass is after the meadow or pasture has been kept closely grazed for a year or two. This tends to bring the rootstocks closer to the surface of the soil. If the land is in cultivation it should first be seeded to meadow or pasture for a year or two if possible. The following control work should be started during the dry, hot weather about the first of July or as soon as the hay crop is removed.

Plow shallow, turning the sod over in order to expose the rootstocks to the drying action of the sun. Hogs and sheep may be allowed to graze on the rootstocks of which they are very fond.

As soon as the little green shoots begin to appear, harrow with a spiketooth or spring harrow, turning the sod and thus drying the roots. The dried material can be raked into piles and burned.

Continue the harrowing until fall, harrowing whenever the quack grass shoots appear above the soil surface. Never let them get higher than one inch.

Leave the land rough over the winter.

In the early spring as soon as the land can be worked, harrow as before or plow if necessary.

If it is an early and dry spring so that most of the quack grass has been killed by corn planting time, plant a tilled crop, such as corn planted in check rows. This crop should be cultivated thoroughly, cutting the quack grass out of the hills or rows with a hoe.

If the quack grass is still abundant keep the harrowing up until about the time when buckwheat should be sowed. A heavy seeding should be applied. This will tend to smother out the remaining quack grass.

After following either of the two preceding paragraphs, the land should be plowed in the fall and left rough over winter.

Next spring plant a good smother crop after the cultivated crop. If a good stand is obtained, very little quack grass will survive. If buckwheat was used the preceding summer, then follow with a cultivated crop.

After the treatment, the land should be in condition so that it can be used for several years without experiencing much trouble with quack grass.

Salt Water For Constipation

Mrs. P. T. H., Tioga county, sends this query: "I have heard that salt water helps to cure or prevent constipation; but isn't it harmful to the kidneys?

Many authorities agree that salt water in the proportion of two level teaspoonfuls of salt to a quart of water, is of benefit in cases of constipation and does not harm the kidneys. Start with a full quart each morning, and gradually decrease to one glass, or as little as will produce the desired result. The exact proportion of salt—two level teaspoons to a quart of water—is most important.

A Solid Salad

Mrs. S. B. C., Chenango county, asks for a salad that will fit in with the idea of cool dishes for hot days, but will give real strength and sustenance."

Russian salad fills the bill. It includes cold roast beef, broiled bacon, sweet pepper, lettuce, olives and dressing. Chop the beef into little bits about the size of a pea, and also cut up fine some thin slices of crisp, cold broiled bacon, and add the chopped sweet pepper. Put the lettuce leaves on a platter, and pile the mixed salad in a mound on each leaf, with olives on the side. Most folks prefer a French dressing; others like a dressing of mayonnaise mixed with chili sauce.

Keep Calves in the Barn

Mr. B. B. M. asks: "I have four dairy calves born in February and March that are not growing well on pasture. This is my first year on the farm and I would appreciate your advice about their feed and care."

Professor H. A. Hopper says that calves born after January 1 should not be put out on pasture the same year. They can get little nourishment from pasture until they are about six months old. Until that age they had better be kept inside. Keep the pens clean and dry, darken the windows to control flies and provide plenty of feed and water. Give fresh water frequently. Feed clean, bright clover or mixed hay in only one day's allowance at a time. A good grain mixture for calves is thirty pounds of corn meal, thirty oats, thirty wheat bran and ten linseed meal. Feed about one pound daily to a six-weeks calf and two pounds to ten weeks. Four pounds a day is considered enough for older calves. Calves old enough to eat roughage should have access to salt.

Back In The Ring

TELL ME AN INDIAN STORY

Dr. E. A. Bates Cornell

(Copyright, 1932)

Why the Tamarack Loses its Leaves

This happened long moons ago when first the Great Spirit caused the trees to grow taller than the bushes and the grasses, and in the times when the tamarack kept its leaves all winter as the spruce and hemlock keep theirs.

A little snowbird was playing with its feathered friends on a sunlit open space in the woodland when, without warning, an old dead limb fell from an overhanging tree and bruised the little snowbird's wing.

The old crow felt sorry for the little snowbird and, taking him on his back, brought him off the cold ground and up in the branches of a nearby tamarack tree. This made the old tamarack angry, and with a snarl he drove the crow and the little snowbird away.

A neighboring hemlock saw the act and waved a hearty welcome, saying, "Come, my branches shall shield the little snowbird until he gets well; and the old grey squirrel who lives in my trunk will bring him seeds to eat and care for him."

After a while, the snowbird's wing became healed and so today we see the crow, the snowbird and their friend, the grey squirrel, having a merry time together in the friendly hemlock. And each fall, you can see the snarly tamarack lose its leaves and stand bare and ugly all winter.

The Indians say it is because it would not shelter the little snowbird when the old limb fell and bruised the bird's wing many moons ago.

Mayor Walker gets about one threatening letter a year. Other mayors received dozens. But all sorts of people bring in complaints. One woman lost two trunks eight years ago and she wants the mayor to do something about it.

Many New Events Will Be Presented At Farmers' Picnic

In spite of its fourteen years of age the Steuben County Farmers' Picnic will present in its program many new events. It has been the record of the picnic, which will be held on the Bath Fairgrounds, Saturday, to be bigger and better each year and the current event will be no exception.

The program begins with a horseshoe pitching tournament, starting promptly at nine o'clock. All shoe tossers of the county are eligible and the winner of the tournament will represent Steuben at the State Fair. The runners up will receive cash prizes of $5, $3 and $2.

The horse pulling contest which is conducted on the track near the horse stables begins at 9:30. Irving Yost of Thurston, A. J. McCaig of Jasper and W. M. Manchester of Addison are in charge of the event. The teams will pull in classes of under 2500 pounds, 2500 to 3000 pounds and over 3000 pounds. The draw is 14½ feet with a loaded stoneboat. Substantial cash prices are offered the winners in each class.

Boys and Girls Compete

The junior sports are always a feature of the morning's program. Joe Bailey of Bath and Buck Welch of Corning will have charge of this part of the program, which offers some interesting events. For boys there will balloon blowing, cracker race, a rubber boot race and pie eating. Girls will compete for honors in hoop rolling, a newspaper race, rope skipping and three-legged race. These events are run off on the race track in front of the grandstand and begin at 9:30.

The Prattsburg band will offer a concert during the noon hour and will play at intervals during the afternoon. The senior sport events start at 1:15 and include a goggle race for men and women, tire tube race for men, scooter race for women and cow calling for men.

The next event on the program will be a mule race. The mule derbies are one of the most popular features of the Steuben County Farmers' Picnic. A number of new animals are already entered for this year half mile dash.

Feature Special Attractions

Thos. Clancy and Edwin Riopelle, famous banjo artists of Hornell, will render several numbers. John McDermott, noted old-time fiddler of Cortland, will play some of the favorite old-time numbers and will call for a Virginia Reel to be danced by six couples under the leadership of Eldon Jamison of Adrian.

Other events will be a balloon contest for men, and egg throwing for women. A feature of the afternoon program will be the presentation of the Grange float that won first prize at the George Washington festival at Syracuse on July 4, followed by a husband calling contest for women and a match, candle and tire race for men.

Those couples who are celebrating their 50th anniversary this year are urged to attend the picnic as a special event has been prepared in their honor. Then there will be a cow calling contest for men and a clothespin race for women, followed by a banana race for men and women.

Many Other Events

Community singing will be led by A. L. Blades of Hornell. At 2 P. M. there will be a soft ball game between Savona and Arkport. Frank Antill of Corning, former Pennsylvania state champion, will pitch the winner of the county tournament at 2:30 and will give an exhibition of trick and fancy horse shoe pitching at 3:00. These and many other events are included in the big event to be held on the Bath Fairgrounds, August 6. All the farm families of Steuben County are cordially invited to attend. to defray the expense of the picnic a small gate charge of ten cents for adults and children over twelve is charged. Refreshments will be offered for sale on the grounds by the Bath Grange.

Colonel Donovan Reports Fine Work by Legion Posts in Drive Against Unemployment

New York, Aug. 2—Col. William J. Donovan whose nomination for Governor is being intensely urged by up-state Republican leaders and business men, has made a report to the American Legion's National Employment Commission of which he is New York State chairman. It was this Commission which set out on February 15 to obtain jobs for about one million men and women and the Donovan report deals with what New York accomplished.

The drive reached its objective early in July and of the million jobs obtained New York State furnished ten per cent or 100,000. This was in excess of its quota and the result was highly gratifying to the chairman who wrote a personal letter to the Commander of every Post participating in the campaign and also to the Commanders who notified him that there was so little unemployment in their communities an organized effort to find work was unnecessary.

The report shows that when Colonel Donovan took over the committee the Empire State was far down in the column and but seventy Posts, including those working in New York City, were on the active list. New York soon led her forty-seven sister states and the number of active posts rapidly increased. When the drive ended the total was 390. Of these posts eighty-five were in New York City and they accounted for 12,000 jobs. The balance were obtained by Posts in cities, towns and villages scattered throughout the state. Letters were received from 120 Commanders saying that drives were unnecessary.

"I have unbounded admiration for the way the Legionnaires worked to aid the unemployed", said Colonel Donovan, "and I want not only to thank and compliment them but also the members of the Legion's Auxiliary who worked with them."

Tunney Into Politics

James J. (Gene) Tunney, retired undefeated heavyweight champion, is being prevailed upon to enter the political arena as a candidate for congressman-at-large or senatorial toga on the Democratic ticket in Connecticut at the November elections. Both Roosevelt and National Chairman Farley favor his making the race.

Over Half of Addison Troop At Scout Camp

The Boy Scouts of Troop No. 27 have returned from Camp Gorton, Lake Waneta. Over fifty per cent of the troop went on a special rate under the direction of the scout master, Dixon Curtis.

Camp Gorton was filled beyond capacity and extra tents and cots were provided, a total of 120 scouts being present.

It was a busy week for the scouts, each day full of activity. The program was as follows: 7:00, first call and morning dip in the lake; 8:00, breakfast; 9:00 inspection; 10:00 scouting period; 11:00 swim; 12:00, mess; 1:00, rest hour; 2:00, games; 3:00, scouting period; 4:00 swim; 5:00, retreat; 6:00, mess; 7:00, games; 8:00, council fire; 9:30, taps.

The camp was divided with two groups, the Senecas and the Cayugas and members of Troop 27 were divided between the two groups. Each tent of these groups was called a patrol and named. One tent called Wildcats was made of Troop 27 scouts under the tent leadership of Russell Wade. This patrol won the honors of the week for highest honors on inspection and tests passed. Each scout in this tent was awarded a maroon bar pin for his part.

Other scouts in other patrols passed several tests and passed to second class.

The following scouts attended the camp during the week: Curtis Aldrich, Gilbert Brown, William Brewster, William Claire, Jimmie Hope, Wilbur Hannahs, John Phillips, Charles Wade, Russell Wade, Donald Gillespie, Joseph Dominick, Alio Triches Wendell Root, William Casson, James Neally, Walter Curtis, Francis Kelly, Maynard Allen, Roland Fenton, David Little, Harold Heidrich, William Wilson, Robert Dykins.

Charles Wade, William Casson, Maynard Allen and Curtis Aldrich remained over for the second week.

Another group of scouts is planning to go the week of August 7th-14th. In this group are Wendell Root, William Brewster, Curtis Aldrich and Raymond Hargrave.

Electric Company Offers More Light For Less Money

The New York Central Electric Company applied at the last meeting of the Village Board for renewal of the street lighting contract for Addison. The lighting contract expired some time ago, since then the village has refused up to the present to renew.

The representative of the electric company offered Monday evening a new contract which would provide new lights along Main Street with 600 watt bulbs, in place of the 250 watt lights now used here. Although more current would be furnished with the new lights, New York Central would sign a contract for $50 less than what the village has been paying in the past. They assured the board that this rate is as low as any community is now getting, from them.

New York Central would proceed to rewire the streets where trouble is at present coming, if the new contract is signed. The board took the new proposal under advisement, and the village fathers will doubtless come to some decision in the matter in the near future.

Band Concert To Be Held Here Saturday

DENNIS RILEY

Dennis T. Riley, aged 57, died Sunday evening at the Bath Hospital following a long illness.

Mr. Riley was born in Elmira, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Riley. He married Nora Walker of Du Bois, Pa., 26 years ago. Mr. Riley lived in Addison 18 years prior to his death, having been telegrapher for the Western Union and B. & S. station agent up to the ttime failing health caused him to relinquish active work some months ago. He had many friends among those with whom he came in contact at Addison and other places.

Mr. Riley leaves his wife and one son Francis. Also two brothers, P. J. and John R. Riley of Buffalo, one sister, Mrs. Margaret Whitmore of Elmira. He was a member of St. Catherine's Church from which he was buried Wednesday morning at 9:00 o'clock following a requiem mass.

Predict Controversy Over St. Lawrence Treaty

Electric Washers Clean Nations Dirty Linen

Soiled linen, 240,000 tons of it, is cleaned each week in the United States' 8,000,000 electrical washers. In a year the total is 12,480,000 tons, H. P. Smith & Son of Woodhull, N. Y.. local Speed Queen washer dealer, said today.

"With almost two-fifths of the country's electricity wired homes now equipped with washers, the weekly washing in each averages sixty pounds, according to a survey by the American washing machine manufacturers' association", he said. "Every Monday, then, 480,000,000 pounds of ma's kitchen aprons, pa's socks, Edna's pinafores and Junior's rompers are tumbled into the tubs.

"Immense as these totals are, they are growing steadily because of the necessity of economy and the heightened speed and efficiency that now can be had in 'doing the wash'."

If the nation's housewives ever suddenly should take it into their collective heads unanimously to move themselves to other climes, it would require 6,845 box-cars to transport the week's washing.

"IKE"—with a "double-O"

Up till 1929, for thirty-five years or so, any letter addressed to "Mr. Hoover, The White House, Washington" would have been delivered to "Ike" Hoover, who has been the major-domo of the Executive Mansion since the days of President McKinley. Few people outside of Washington realize that there are two Mr. Hoovers in the White House, for Ike is still on the job, and the next tenant of the White House will probably keep him there. He manages the President's domestic arrangements, bosses the cooks, chauffeurs and servants generally, and his official title is "steward of the White House".

Somebody asked Ike Hoover the other day who he thought would be his next boss. He replied:

"I don't know who is going to be, but he will have a double 'o' in his name, the same as mine."

The 1932 New York state peach crop is 14 per cent less than last year, the grape crop 26 per cent less, the potato crop 23 per cent less, and the apple crop 2 per cent larger than last year.

NEW OUTING PARK FOR ADDISON

The Chase grove and park three miles north of Addison is now available for reunions, picnics and Sunday gatherings; talks, lectures, etc., etc. There will be co-operation by the owner with all those who wish to use this park. We can arrange to supply music, decorations and additional features to add to the interest of such occasions. Or lectures, scientific and educational talks upon many subjects.

It is intended to make this park one where will be worth while to go on Sundays; and where there will be music and something otherwise to compensate for your trip, the time and expense; and to furnish a place to see, hear and learn something as well as for enjoyment.

The management will be interested also to get into touch with people of ideas, who could or might assist or aid in the plan or development in any way; or take part in conducting it.

This beautiful park here of many acres—is partly developed. A good start at least has been made; and should be much better as time goes on with added features and improvements.

A swimming pool, bathing beach and a long motor boat waterway are entirely feasible here, if desired—Or would sell the property outright.
